1 John 4:4-6; 9

We may better understand the jealous guardianship that John and the other apostles claim with respect to the truth when we remember that they exercised it in service to the message that God, in His incomparable love, gave His Son so that we might live.

John's words speak to us with unrelenting force: God gives love, produces love, acts in love, and is love. May this loving God grant us grace to see love in the full context of Biblical revelation so that we will be able to distinguish it from our fallen misinterpretations. May we know what it affirms and denies, what it provides and withholds, what it champions and abases, what it receives and rejects . . . what it is and is not.
